ZHENGYAN & BANYA

"Zhengyan", also called "Mingyan", refers to the Wuyi rock teas from the core production areas, while "Banyan", also called "Waishan" or "Shanbian", comes from the original but NOT core production areas and is a little cheaper than Zhengyan. Zhengyan tea producing areas are commonly called as "Three Pits and Two Gullies". It refers to Huiyuan Pit, Niulan Pit, Daoshui Pit, Liuxiang Gully and Wuyuan Gully in the old days, which are symbolic places of Zhengyan tea producing areas. These places feature steep cliffs, good environment, small streams, low temperature difference between summer and winter. The soil of Zhengyan tea producing areas is highly permeable, rich in potassium and manganese, and proper in PH value, which contribute to the tea's rock charm. Now, Zhengyan tea producing areas mainly include: Tianxin Rock, Matou Rock, Huiyuan Pit, Zhuchao, Bishi, Yanzichao, Royal Tea Garden, Yuhua Dong, Shuilian Dong, Fuoguo, Taohua Dong, Guilin, Sanyang Peak, etc. According to the national standards, these places are generally called Mingyan tea producing area or Mount Wuyi scenic reserves.
